

Federalist Papers

By Matt

The federalist papers were a very important document in the history of America. The federalist papers wanted to ratify the Constitution. After the Constitution, many people argued that the Constitution should be changed.

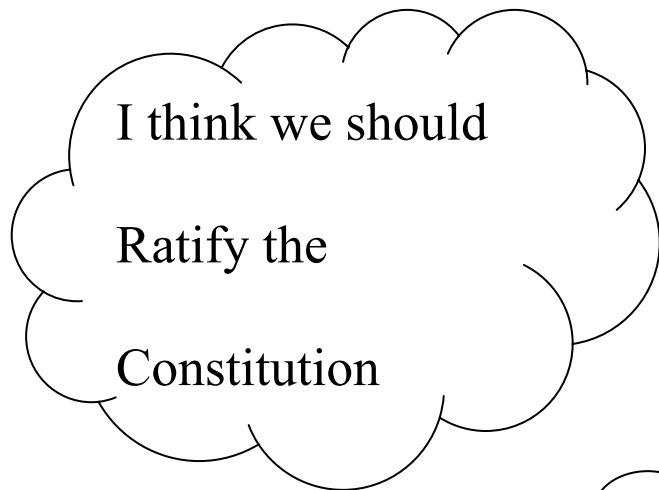

Newspapers published arguments on both sides. The essays urged voters to ratify the constitution. They wanted to do this to give all parts of government equal power. They thought too much central power would limit individual freedom

The federalist papers were a series of essays. They were first signed as publius. They consisted of 85 essays.

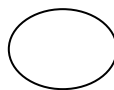

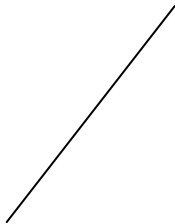

Alexander Hamilton, John Jay, and James Madison, wrote them. They took from 1787-1788 to make. In 1788 they were made into a book called the Federalist papers. James Madison wrote 28 of the papers, Alexander Hamilton wrote 52, and John Jay wrote 5 of the Federalist Papers.

Delegates voted to ratify the constitution.

In conclusion, the Federalist Papers helped to ratify the constitution. They also helped give equal power to all branches of government. That is why the federalist Papers were very important in the history of America.
